UAE's Dana Gas reports two new Egypt gas finds

DUBAI - United Arab Emirates-based Dana Gas said on Tuesday it had made two gas finds in Egypt with reserves totaling an estimated 86 billion cubic feet.

The gas was located in Faraskur-1 and Marzouk-2 in one of its concessions in the Egyptian Nile Delta, the company said in a statement.

"The discoveries at the Marzouk-2 and Faraskur-1 wells represent the eighth and ninth discoveries from our 2008-09 drilling campaign in the Nile Delta," said Chief Executive Ahmed al-Arbeed.

"The ... drilling campaign is continuing to yield very positive results, boosting Dana Gas' production and profitability," he added.

The Faraskur-1 discovery, which is alone expected to add up to 73 billion cubic feet to the company's Egyptian reserves, is located in the West El Manzala Concession, the statement said.

Dana Gas, which relies on Egypt for the bulk of its income, said last year that it planned to invest about $500 million in Egypt and Iraq's Kurdish region in 2009 to boost natural gas output.

Kenya cracks down on illegal guns
Monday, October 12, 2009

Kenyan President Mwai Kibaki has told security forces to crack down on illicit firearms as part of a national disarmament exercise.

Mr Kibaki said those in illegal possession of firearms had to surrender them or face prosecution.

Speaking at a national thanksgiving service in Nairobi on Sunday, Mr Kibaki said lawmakers would tackle the problem.

"To strengthen the legal framework and help mopping up illicit arms, parliament will be asked to amend [the] Firearms Act with a view to providing for stiffer penalties for those found in possession of firearms illegally," he said.

The government was committed to addressing security concerns and ready to undertake meaningful reforms to respond to new types of crime such as terrorism, fraud and human trafficking, he added.

"Training in these areas is already ongoing and will be sustained to enable us to respond effectively to all security challenges."

82nd Airborne Division Helps Train Troops, Coalition Forces in Egypt

Recently, members of the 82nd Airborne Division trained Egyptian and Pakistani military forces in a location near Alexandria, through the Military Operations in Urban Terrain (MOUT) program. The forces were trained during the largest military exercise in the region, called Bright Star, which has been led by Egypt, the US Central Command and Third Army/US Army Central for nearly 30 years.

"Operation Bright Star ...[is] designed to build stronger bonds between the military forces of those participating nations as part of an ongoing series of exercises including airborne, aviation, naval and Marine field training exercises, along with a multinational command post battle-tracking exercise."

"The training is important so they can better understand how we do things. Most of the soldiers we are training are lieutenants and captains so they can go back and train their soldiers with what they learned when they get back to the unit," said Lt. William Ibrahim, one of the trainers of MOUT.

The primary purpose of MOUT training is to build relationships between the militaries involved and to learn how to fight in urban environments. Though the training lasts only one day, soldiers are able to exchange knowledge with each other and often forge successful connections.

"Bright Star will continue building partnerships as it conducts a friendship jump with the coalition forces and will culminate in a computer-based command exercise. Planning for the next Bright Star will begin immediately after the conclusion of the exercise with all participants looking for growth in troops for the next event."
